"I'm the biggest sports junkie," claims model/actress/Lakers fan Bonnie-Jill Laflin. "I have a brother, but I was always the boy in the family. My dad's been taking me to games since I was 2. And I wasn't one of those kids who was asking for Cracker Jack. I was asking, 'How fast does that guy run the 40?'"

Most models who have graced as many lingerie catalogs as the impassioned 24-year-old spend their time either being confused by basic arithmetic or berating themselves for eating that second piece of celery. Not Bonnie-Jill. Her agenda includes working the NBA draft as an assistant to Lakers owner Jerry Buss ("I'll be taking phone calls coming in from other teams"), producing production on sports talk show in San Francisco ("It will be a roundtable like Fox Sports's The Best Damn Sports Show Period, only on the radio"), and hitting the track to bet on the thoroughbred ranches she owns ("I once won $1,500 on an exacta bet").

Although she's had guest spots on TV shows such as Abby Cadabby and is currently the poster girl for Miller Genuine Draft, Bonnie-Jill earns the most recent devotion from her fans as one of the NFL's premier cheerleaders. "I was at the mall recently and this guy came over with the Dallas Cowboys cheerleader calendar I was on the cover of," she recalls. "Why was he at the mall with a calendar from 1997? I don't think he was using it as a calendar."

What sort of grueling physical challenges does a woman have to survive in order to become a Dallas Cowboys cheerleader?
It's a two-week process. Besides dancing, you have to take a 150-question test on current events, plus one on the Dallas Cowboys and one on football history. We were in front of the media constantly, so they wanted the girls to be in tune with what's going on. Even when you're on the team, you take a current events test once a week. If you don't pass, you don't cheer that week. The director was on your ass for everything. She'd poke you with a pencil in areas where she thought you should lose weight. You weigh in every week and you have a two-pound leeway. If you're over or under, you don't cheer. It's like boot camp. Do cheerleaders have tricks to tip their way?
These days, a lot of girls have implants, but at the time, we used huge boob pads. I was dancing at a game once when one of mine flew out. I was like, "O my God, my boob flew out!" I had to go pick it up.
